

List of Contributors

William Nester is a professor in the Department of Government and Politics at St. John's University in New York City and the author of twenty books on various aspects of international relations, including Globalization, War, and Peace in the Twenty-first Century (2010), The Revolutionary Years, 1775-1789: The Art of American Power During the Early Republic (2011), and Napoleon and the Art of Diplomacy (2011)

Michael Bonura serves in the United States Army. He received his Ph.D. from Florida State University and, from 2006 to 2009, he was Assistant Professor at the United States Military Academy in West Point, NY. His publications include Under the Shadow of Napoleon: French Influence on the American Way of Warfare from Independence to the Eve of World War II (New York: New York University Press, 2012).

Kenneth Johnson is Assistant Professor of History at Air Command and Staff College. He earned his Ph.D. from Florida State University, where he researched French navy during the Napoleonic Era under the direction of Prof. Donald D. Howard.

Mark Edward Hay is a doctoral student at the King's College, London. He did his BA in Dutch History at the Vrije Universiteit of Amsterdam and completed his MA in European History and Civilization at Leiden University, Université Paris I Panthéon-Sorbonne and Oxford University, St Cross College. Since November 2009 he has worked for the Huygens Institute in The Hague.

Wayne Hanley is an associate professor of history and chairperson of the Department of History at West Chester University. He holds a doctorate in modern European history from the University of Missouri-Columbia with a specialty in Revolutionary France. He has written numerous papers on the Napoleonic history and authored The Genesis of Napoleonic Propaganda, 1796-1799 (Columbia University Press, 2005; e-book, 2003)..

Emilio Ocampo is an independent historian based in Buenos Aires, Argentina. After graduating from the University of Buenos Aires, he obtained an MBA degree at the University of Chicago. Aside from working as an investment banker at leading financial institutions in New York and London, he also pursued his passion for history and, in 2002, wrote a book about Carlos de Alvear, one of the leaders of South American independence. While researching at the British Archives he stumbled upon documents on plans to rescue Napoleon from St. Helena, which launched him on a year-long research effort in the archives of Spain, France, Austria and the United States. The result was "The Emperor's Last Campaign: A Napoleonic Empire in America" (University of Alabama Press, 2009), which received the 2009 Literary Prize of the International Napoleonic Society; the book's Spanish edition has been recently published in Argentina. He is also the author of two other books and a number of articles on early 19th century history.

Thomas M. Barden is Fellow of International Napoleonic Society. He teaches history at State University of New York at Geneseo.

J. David Markham is President of the International Napoleonic Society. Among his numerous publications on the Napoleonic history are Imperial Glory: Bulletins of Napoleon's Grande Armée 1805-1814 (London: Greenhill, 2003), Napoleon's Road to Glory: Triumphs, Defeats and Immortality (London : Brassey's, 2003), Napoleon for Dummies (Indianapolis: Wiley, 2005) and The Road to St Helena: Napoleon After Waterloo (Barnsley, England : Pen & Sword Military, 2008)

Anne Morddel is a Fellow of the International Napoleonic Society.

Mark Ehlers is a Fellow of the International Napoleonic Society.

William L. Chew is professor of history and associate dean at the Vesalius College in Brussels (Belgium). He received his Ph.D. from the University of Tübingen and focused his research on imagological studies of French and American perceptions of each other in cultural and historical sources. He has published a series of works on American travelers in France during the Revolutionary and Napoleonic era, including National Stereotypes in Perspective: Americans in France–Frenchmen in America" (2001)

Douglas D. Scott is a Fellow of the International Napoleonic Society.